POSTAL SAVINGS

Weeks Made Chairman to Prevent Favorable Action, Say Advocates.

IS RALLYING POINT FOR THE INSURGENTS

Opportunity of Lining Up Squarely With the President Presents Itself.

Despite the approval of the Presi of the measure say that Representative collect. Weeks of Massachusetts, who is opposed to the measure, was placed at the head of the Committee on Postoffices and Postroads for the very purpose of sts. Main 497.

"I had no intimation from the Speaker that I was to be made chairman of this committee," he said. "My selection and my acceptance, so far as I know, came without any thought of probable action on this or any other bill.

my acceptance, so far as I know, came without any thought of probable action on this or any other bill.

Not a Reactionary.

"Perhaps the Speaker knows that I have a habit of looking into things before I support certain legislation. If being a reactionary means that I investigate before I vote, then I may be one, but I do not so construe the term. I don't think I am either a radical or a reactionary. I simply insist upon not going into things blindly."

While declining to comment broadly upon the postal savings bank scheme, Mr. Weeks intimated that it seemed the proper thing to await the report of the Monetary Commission before entering into a savings bank project.

This is the cry raised also by other opponents of the measure. With Representative Weeks at the head of the House Committee on Postoffices and Postroads, and Senator Penrose, an Aldrich sub-lieutenant in the tariff fight, the head of a similar committee in the Senate, each with the power to appoint subcommittees to consider this particular measure, the adherents of the postal savings bank bill have no particular reason to be optimistic.

Insurgents' Fight.

Insurgents' Fight. It is now well understood that the nsurgents of the House, cognizant of this state of affairs, propose to make this bill their rallying cry. For a long insurgents of the House, cognizant of this state of affairs, propose to make this bill their rallying cry. For a long while the insurgents have struggled along under the charge that they were opposing the Administration. It has been a part of their fight to combat this idea.

Here the opportunity presents itself to line up squarely with the President on the postal savings bank proposition and to squarely refute the anti-Administration cry raised against them by the Cannon and Aldrich forces.

Just to what extent President Taft will encourage such a campaign, however, is another matter. There are many who believe that the President would prefer to see the postal savings bank bill fall of passage at this session rather than to have it pass through insurgent aid and the overthrow of the organization in the House and Senate.

Representative Weeks hasn't denied that at present he is not in favor of a postal savings bank. He does disavow, however, that there has been any prearranged plan to kill the bill in committee:
